

Book It: The Five Best Literary Events This Week

TEAGUE BOHLEN | MARCH 5, 2018 | 8:00AM

AA

When it comes to literary pursuit, you have two choices this week: You could read some magical realism while drinking whiskey and quoting Monty Python with your mom as she regales you with stories of famous women in history (and nags you about how you really ought to call her more). Or you could just attend all the functions mentioned in this list and get the same experience, only with a lot less headache and a lot more stuff for your bookshelf.

Might we suggest the latter? If we've convinced you, here are items for your to-do list this week. (If not, better call your mom and get that set up. And buy a lot of whiskey.)

Jill Tietjen, Her Story: A Timeline of the Women Who Changed America

Secular Hub

Sunday, March 11, 4 p.m.

3100 Downing Street, Unit C

Come celebrate Women's History Month with author, engineer and historian Jill Tietjen, who will highlight humanist stories of inspiring women from her best-selling book Her Story: A Timeline of the Women Who Changed America. Tietjen is a Denver local who is the former CEO of the Women's Hall of Fame and was inducted into the Colorado Women's Hall of Fame in 2010. Registration is required at the Secular Hub's meetup events page. That Pennsylvania Avenue glass ceiling may not have broken back in 2016 as most thought it would, but it's coming down, people. It's coming down.
